The screenshot shows a mobile application interface for the Longman Dictionary of Contemporary English. The search bar at the top contains the word "good". Below the search bar, the word "good" is listed again in a larger font. A "Word family" section follows, listing "noun good goodie goody goodness" and "goods". Then, "adjective good goodish" and "adverb good". A blue box at the bottom left contains the text "From Longman Dictionary of Contemporary English". The main definition of "good" is provided, starting with "1 OF A HIGH STANDARD of a high standard or quality opp bad, poor". It includes several examples: "a good hotel", "good quality cloth", "The train service is not very good.", "My French is better than my Spanish.", and "You'll receive the best medical". At the bottom of the screen, there are three navigation icons: Webster, Longman, and Images.

The dictionaries were created primarily for human use (e.g. language/teaching, translation, lexicology) and are typically semi-symological, which means they are organized around words and contain information about their meanings, definitions, pronunciation, etc. There are 95 dictionaries in the clarification infrastructure. , while the rest (41) includes a variety of bilingual and multilingual language combinations (e.g., English-Greek, Estonian-English, karelian-finnish). In most cases, dictionaries can be downloaded directly from national repositories or consulted through easy-to-use online search environments.
